Jail: State Parolees

Summary

- 1) 16% of the city's jail population is charged with a state parole violation.
- 2) The number of people detained on technical parole violations (allegedly broke a parole condition, but not charged with a new crime) is increasing (up 15% since 2014), while the size of all other jail populations is decreasing.
- 3) People charged with parole violations stay in custody longer than other people, occupying 1400 to 1600 jail beds every day. They are unable to leave custody until the state parole charge is resolved, which typically takes 50-60 days.

How State Parole Works

What is parole?

- ✦ New York State prisons incarcerate individuals who were convicted of a crime and originally sentenced to more than one year in a correctional facility. When someone is released from state prison, the State Department of Corrections and Community Supervision (DOCCS) may require that they comply with a general set of conditions established by the Board of Parole (See Appendix A). They may also be required to comply with a number of 'special conditions' ordered by the Board of Parole or by their parole officer.
- ✦ This period of supervision is commonly referred to as "parole" and each person on parole has a state parole officer who meets regularly to ensure that the individual is following the rules of their release and has the supports needed to re-enter society.

What is a parole violation?

- ✦ A person violates parole when one of the following happens:
  - 1. Technical violation: They break one or more of the rules in the conditions of release but they do not commit a new crime.
    - One type of technical violation is absconding. An absconder is defined as someone under parole supervision who has stopped reporting to their parole office, moved residences without permission, and whose whereabouts are unknown.
  - 2. New arrest: They are arrested and charged with committing a new crime.
- ✦ If a person breaks the rules of their release and a warrant is issued, state law requires that they be held in a local jail, pending the outcome of a hearing process.
  - Though jails primarily hold individuals awaiting trial or serving a jail sentence of less than one year, those charged with a state parole violation are also housed in local jails.

What happens when a person violates parole in New York City?

Role of a State DOCCS Parole Officer

- Deliver services
- Report on parolee progress
- Motivate parolees
- Identify alternatives to incarceration where appropriate

Hearing process:

If probable cause is found, person is arraigned. At arraignment: Administrative Law Judge and defense lawyer are assigned and the final hearing process begins.

- ✦ State law requires incarceration without bail when a parole violation warrant is issued.
- ✦ State law requires hearings be held locally. In New York City, these are held on Rikers Island. The City houses these individuals and pays for their detention.
- ✦ Unlike criminal proceedings where the standard of proof is beyond a reasonable doubt, the standard of proof for final parole violation hearings is a preponderance of the evidence. The final determination is made by an Administrative Law Judge who works for the state Board of Parole.

State Parolees in NYC Jails: By the Numbers

On any given day, there are 1,400-1,600 people with state parole violations in New York City jails. Approximately 40% are technical violators; the remaining violated their parole by being arrested for a new crime.

- ✦ The number of technical violators in custody on any given day has been increasing over the past four years and is the only population that is increasing in size, while the rest of the DOC population has been steadily decreasing. They have grown from 5.1% of the average daily population in 2014 to 6.6% in 2017.
- ✦ The number of parole violators with new arrests in custody on any given day has been fluctuating over the past few years, but their proportion within the overall population has been increasing. They have grown from 7.1% of the average daily population in 2014 to 9.1% in 2017.

The number of people detained on technical parole violations has been increasing since 2014; the number detained on parole violations and new arrests varies by year.

Options for reducing the number of state parolees in the city's jails:

Immediate changes:

1. The State can reduce the number of parole violators it puts in Rikers by:
  - ✦ Issuing fewer warrants for technical violations and use graduated sanctions instead.
    - Upon issuance of a warrant, state law requires that upon arrest, the individual be put in Rikers. In 2017, 38% of people with technical violations returned to their communities after their jail stay.
2. The State can speed up the time a parole violator spends on Rikers by:
  - ✦ Assigning more state court judges to handle the hearings.
  - ✦ Scheduling more parole violation hearings per day.
  - ✦ Extending the hearing hours and speeding up the hearing process.
    - By reducing the amount of time a parole violation case takes by 10% (5.7 days), the average daily population incarcerated at Rikers would fall by 62.

Legislative changes:

State law can be changed to end mandatory jail for parole violators.

- ✦ If judges were able to consider a person's risk in making a release decision, lower risk technical parole violators could be placed into Alternatives to Jail and lower risk parole violators charged with a new crime would be eligible for pretrial release.
  - If existing alternatives to jail were used to divert an additional 20% of technical state parole violators, the average daily population incarcerated at Rikers would fall by 125.
  - The goal should be to reserve detention only for those who pose a real risk to the community.
