

Overview:

Are you or your institution interested in working with the NYC Commission on Human Rights to train the next wave of social workers in our city? If yes, please contact our Social Work Unit.

The Commission welcomes masters in social work (MSW) students from all backgrounds in a unique and hands on field experience. Students with a myriad of concentrations and fields of practice are given a unique opportunity to work with advocates dedicated to fighting discrimination in all housing, employment, and public accommodation. This is achieved through our community education trainings, engaging with our attorneys within the Law Enforcement Bureau, working with elected officials to support newly introduced legislations, and creating a space to resolve dispute and conflict in an amicable way. The Commission also collaborates with other city agencies throughout the year via its programming and event planning.

We look forward to receiving your inquiries and working together to provide an exceptional field placement experience to your incoming first- and second-year social work students. Universities can contact us at crb@cchr.nyc.gov to discuss further.