THE TEST:

The multiple-choice test will be given at a computer terminal. Your score on this test will be used to determine your place on an eligible list. You must achieve a score of at least 70% to pass the test. The multiple-choice test is designed to assess the extent to which candidates have certain knowledge and abilities determined to be important to the performance of the tasks of an Inspector (Housing). Task areas to be tested are as follows: building mechanical systems such as plumbing, heating, ventilation and other parts of multiple and single dwellings such as windows, doors and public access areas; various building materials used in the construction of multiple dwellings; related trade practices such as carpentry, plumbing and plastering; comprehension and interpretation of housing laws, building codes, violation codes, rules and regulations; filling out forms and preparing reports; navigating and understanding directional commands, and other related areas.

The test may include questions requiring the use of any of the following abilities:

Written Comprehension: understanding written sentences and paragraphs. Example: An Inspector (Housing) would use this ability to read websites or borough office information, using a department computer, or to research if an apartment is illegal.

Written Expression: using English words or sentences in writing so that others will understand. Example: An Inspector (Housing) would use this ability to write out a violation that is clear and concise. This ensures the violation is able to stand in court and can be clearly understood by landlords and the general public.

Information Ordering: following correctly a given rule or set of rules to arrange things or actions in a certain order. The rule or set of rules used must be given. The things or actions to be put in order can include numbers, letters, words, pictures, procedures, sentences, and mathematical or logical operations. Example: An Inspector (Housing) would use this ability to know the steps to a Heating Complaint Inspection, by following the steps outlined in procedures.

Spatial Orientation: determining where you are in relation to the location of some object, or where the object is in relation to you. Example: An Inspector (Housing) would use this ability to use compass location to know where the inspector is located in an apartment of a building.

Visualization: imagining how something would look when it is moved around or when its parts are moved or rearranged. It requires the forming of mental images of how patterns or objects would look after certain changes, such as unfolding or rotation. Predicting how an object, set of objects, or pattern will appear after the changes have been carried out. Example: An Inspector (Housing) would use this ability to verify whether or not changes were made in the apartment layout being inspected.

Deductive Reasoning: applying general rules to specific problems to come up with logical answers. It involves deciding if an answer makes sense. Example: An Inspector (Housing) would use this ability to know a painted sprinkler head is a violation, but the absence of water in a sprinkler system is an emergency situation.

Inductive Reasoning: combining separate pieces of information, or specific answers to problems, to form general rules or conclusions. It involves the ability to think of possible reasons for why things go together. Example: An Inspector (Housing) would use this ability to know when to apply the proper violation, using his/her knowledge of building maintenance and fire codes, and using that knowledge to justify a violation order or summons.

Number Facility: the degree to which adding, subtracting, multiplying and dividing can be done quickly and correctly. These can be steps in other operations like finding percentages. Example: An Inspector (Housing) would use this ability to use basic math to calculate square footage in an occupied room.

Certain questions may need to be answered on the basis of documents or other information supplied to the candidates on the date of the multiple-choice exam.
