No later than September 1, 2018, and quarterly thereafter, the department shall submit to the speaker of the council and post online the total number of unsheltered homeless persons included in the record required pursuant to this subdivision, disaggregated to the extent available by the location where outreach staff first engaged the unsheltered homeless person.

September 2019 Report (reflecting April, May, and June of 2019)

Pursuant to Local Law 217 of 2017 to amend the administrative code of the city of New York, in relation to a record of the unsheltered homeless population, the Department of Homeless Services respectfully submits the report below.

In 2017, we announced our Turning the Tide (TTT) plan to transform the City's approach to providing shelter during the past four decades. Our plan puts people and communities first; and accomplishes this goal by ending decades-old stop-gap measures like the 19-year use of ineffective cluster shelter sites and the practice of renting commercial hotel rooms, which dates back, on and off, to the 1960s. Instead, through our plan, we are opening a smaller number of new borough-based shelters to help families and individuals stay connected to the anchors of life – such as schools, jobs, health care, families and houses of worship – as they get back on their feet.

With significant investments, over the past year, we have been implementing our transformation plan – while at the same time making sure in the short-term that we provide shelter each night to the families and individuals who turn to us for help as required by the right to shelter guaranteed in New York City.

DHS's transformative plan is built on four core pillars: preventing homelessness in the first place whenever we can; bringing people in from the streets and subways 24/7; rehousing people who become homeless; and transforming the haphazard approach to providing shelter and services that has built up over the past four decades.

As we have testified previously, the average monthly census for DHS shelters increased 115 percent from 1994 into 2014 – rising from 23,868 men, women, and children in January 1994, to 31,009 in January 2002, and 51,470 in January 2014. But after nearly four decades of an ever-increasing homeless population in NYC, the de Blasio administration has finally broken the trajectory of growth in homelessness; and, while we know we have more work to do, with the new programs, reforms, and investments we are implementing, we are headed in the right direction, holding the DHS census essentially flat year over year in 2017 and 2018 and now driving it down.

Without the initiatives that we have been implementing, we projected that the current DHS census would be in excess of 71,000 instead of below the 60,000 level where it is today. We've also made progress driving down the number of families experiencing homelessness and residing in shelter on any given night, with the peak number of individuals across those families declining by nearly 3,000 between 2014 and 2018. At the same time, through the initiatives outlined below, we've already shrunk the NYCDHS shelter footprint by approximately 31 percent—well on our way towards our goal of shrinking the footprint by 45 percent overall—by getting out of more than 200 locations that did not meet our standards and siting a smaller number of 48 borough-based shelters, thereby achieving a net reduction of more than 200 shelter locations, down to fewer than 450 locations from the 647 reported in TTT.

Addressing Street Homelessness – Bringing People Inside

HOME-STAT

The most comprehensive outreach program in the nation, HOME-STAT (Homeless Outreach & Mobile Engagement Street Action Teams) encapsulates all New York City’s street homeless outreach efforts, from 24/7/365 in-field/on-streets outreach and engagement across the five boroughs, to case management, to dedicated facilities and tailored services.

Overall, we have more than doubled the City’s investment in street homeless programs, increasing by more than $81.4 million (nearly 200 percent) – from $44.6 million in FY14 to an investment of $126 million in FY20.

Through these investments, programs, and enhanced efforts, in which hundreds of highly-trained not-for-profit outreach staff, including licensed social workers, proactively canvass the streets to engage homeless New Yorkers, our City has helped more than 2,240 New Yorkers experiencing unsheltered homelessness come in from the streets into transitional programs or permanent housing.

There is no one-size-fits-all approach to ending homelessness. With a dedicated not-for-profit provider for each borough (the Manhattan Outreach Consortium, led by CUCS working with Goddard Riverside and Breaking Ground, in Manhattan; Breaking Ground in Brooklyn and Queens; BronxWorks in the Bronx; and Project Hospitality on Staten Island; and Bowery Residents Committee (BRC) on the subways), HOME-STAT outreach teams work around the clock across the five boroughs by making regular contact with street homeless New Yorkers: getting to know them, developing trust, and sharing information about the resources available to them.

HOME-STAT outreach teams, more than doubled in size/staff under this Administration, consist of multi-disciplinary teams working around the clock to seek out individuals living in public spaces and link them to services with the goal of bringing them indoors, building relationships with individuals who over time have historically rejected services. Outreach teams are also focused on the most vulnerable of those living outside to ensure they are safe and/or not at risk for injury or death. This aspect of their role becomes heightened during times of extreme weather. Outreach teams also perform crisis intervention assessments and work on housing placements through ongoing case management and supportive services, which includes linking clients to medical benefits as they continue to work with these individuals throughout their journey. The outreach teams meet people “where they are” both literally and figuratively—whether that means conducting a psychiatric evaluation on a street corner or sending an outreach worker who can speak to a client in his or her native language.

Since 2015, through our new investments, we have tripled the number of low-barrier beds dedicated to better serving our individuals experiencing unsheltered homelessness. As of this year, there are approximately 1,800 beds dedicated to serving and supporting street homeless New Yorkers, with hundreds more opening in the coming years, bringing the total to approximately 2,100.

Central to the HOME-STAT effort, these outreach teams continue to build the City's first-ever by-name list of individuals known to be homeless and residing on the streets, more effectively enabling the teams to directly and repeatedly engage New Yorkers in need where they are, continually offering supports and case management resources while developing the trust and relationships that will ultimately encourage these individuals to accept services and transition off the streets. This tool allows outreach staff to update client and case information in real time, which may include the client's first and last name, date of birth, race or ethnicity, and the location where outreach staff engaged the unsheltered homeless person, including but not limited to, a bus shelter, drop-in center, hospital, park, safe haven, or subway.

As part of that by-name list, HOME-STAT outreach teams now know and are actively engaged with approximately 1,300 individuals by name who are confirmed to be homeless and living on the streets. HOME-STAT outreach teams are also continuing to engage another approximately 2,400 individuals encountered on the streets to evaluate their living situations, determine whether they are homeless, and assess what specific supports they may need.

To this end, pursuant to Local Law 217 of 2017 to amend the administrative code of the city of New York, in relation to a record of the unsheltered homeless population, the Department of Homeless Services respectfully submits the report below.
