NEW YORK—Mayor Bill de Blasio, U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development Secretary Julián Castro, Council Speaker Melissa Mark-Viverito, and HRA Commissioner Steve Banks will kick-off a HOPE count volunteer training session at PS 116 in Manhattan. This event will be open press.

Following the volunteer training kick-off, the Mayor, HUD Secretary, Speaker Mark-Viverito and Commissioner will go out and review one of the survey routes in advance of the count. This portion of the event will be pooled. Pool details will be finalized and sent on Monday. Members of the media may remain at the school to observe the remainder of the training, including volunteers leaving to start the HOPE count.

In order to protect the privacy of homeless individuals on our streets and ensure a more accurate count, there will be no media tours during the actual count between 12 AM and 4 AM. ABOUT THE HOPE COUNT:

The Homeless Outreach Population Estimate (HOPE) is an annual, HUD-mandated, point-in-time estimate to assess the number of individuals chronically living in New York City's public spaces. On the night of the HOPE Count, thousands of volunteers are assembled and sent out in teams to survey New York's streets, subways and parks. Conducted by the NYC Department of Homeless Services (DHS), the HOPE Count is a point-in-time estimate of chronically unsheltered individuals used to project service needs, allocate resources for the street homeless population, and educate and engage fellow New Yorkers about this serious issue affecting us all.

The HOPE Count serves to increase public accountability and continually evaluate and improve the programming designed to help street homeless New Yorkers. The event began in Manhattan in 2003 and has expanded Citywide every year since 2005. When HOME-STAT, the nation's most comprehensive street homeless outreach program, is fully ramped up in March, the City will have even more data on chronically homeless individuals living in the City's public spaces.
