New York City and State Partners Announce Joint Effort to Combat Wage Theft in the Construction Industry

Indictments Stem from Joint Effort to Prevent Worker Exploitation through Statewide Wage Theft Initiative

Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus R. Vance, Jr., New York State Governor Andrew M. Cuomo, New York State Attorney General Eric T. Schneiderman, Acting Brooklyn District Attorney Eric Gonzalez, Bronx District Attorney Darcel D. Clark, Queens District Attorney Richard A. Brown, Staten Island District Attorney Michael E. McMahon, Nassau County District Attorney Madeline Singas, Westchester District Attorney Anthony A. Scarpino, Jr., New York City Department of Investigation Commissioner Mark G. Peters, and New York City Comptroller Scott M. Stringer today announced criminal charges in a series of cases stemming from a joint effort by city and state partners in law enforcement and government to prevent the exploitation of workers through the Wage Theft Initiative and as part of a greater effort to ensure workplace safety, root out corruption, and deter fraud in the construction industry.

“Every week, New Yorkers lose $20 million in unpaid wages,” said Manhattan District Attorney Cyrus R. Vance, Jr. “And every day, construction workers who risk their lives doing dangerous jobs have to wonder whether they’ll actually be paid for their work. Wage theft is one of the most pervasive problems in New York City and State, and in the construction industry in particular, workers are all too often preyed upon by their employers, who are able to steal millions of dollars in unpaid wages. I’m proud and grateful to stand with our partners in law enforcement and government against this type of fraud. As the giving season approaches, it is my hope that the holidays will be that much brighter for the families of more than 300 New Yorkers who will be receiving $500,000 in back pay owed to them.”

Governor Cuomo said: “New York believes in a fair day’s pay for a fair day’s work and has zero tolerance for those who seek to rob employees and deny them the wages they are rightfully owed. This crackdown sends a strong and direct message that workers will be protected and the principles of fairness and equality will continue to be upheld in this great state.”

Attorney General Schneiderman said: “The law is clear: New Yorkers are entitled to a fair day’s pay for a fair day’s work. My office has zero tolerance for wage theft. Since 2011, we’ve recovered nearly $30 million in stolen wages for more than 21,000 workers – and we’ll continue to ensure that New York’s working families are given the fair shake they deserve.”

Acting District Attorney Eric Gonzalez said: “In Brooklyn, we are committed to protecting workers and ensuring that they are not cheated out of their hard-earned wages. We have been fighting to hold employers accountable for a long time, and will continue to do so. We are proud to be a part of the Wage Theft Initiative to make certain that businesses across the state are put on notice that stealing from workers is a crime and will be prosecuted.”

Bronx District Attorney Darcel D. Clark said: “Anyone who would exploit construction workers who perform difficult, often dangerous jobs building our city’s skyline will be prosecuted and face punishment. The Statewide Wage Theft Initiative empowers us to fight more effectively as partners to ensure wage-fairness, and to stem corruption and fraud in this vital industry. As in the past, the Bronx District Attorney’s Office is prepared to investigate and prosecute all offenders who consciously prey on hard-working hardhats. They deserve, as do all workers, to be paid a fair wage for every hour of labor.”

Queens District Attorney Richard Brown said: “The failure to pay wages is a prevalent problem all over New York and in Queens, in particular, due to our large immigrant population. Many immigrant workers who come to the United States are forced to work for private contractors for far below prevailing rates and then only to see their wages withheld or their paychecks bounce for lack of funds. The end result is that the workers are put in the difficult position of complaining and losing their jobs or staying silent and being taken advantage of. In the case being prosecuted in Queens, the employers are alleged to have refused to pay employees the wages agreed upon by both parties.”

Nassau County District Attorney Madeline Singas said: “Every week, crooked contractors steal millions of dollars from hardworking men and women in the construction industry. Wage theft is a growing problem in our state and it is up to us, as district attorneys, to protect victimized workers and prosecute contractors who break the law. I thank DA Vance, the State Department of Labor, and our law enforcement partners for creating the Wage Theft Initiative. Working together, we will remove the bad actors and protect the dignity of the men and women in New York’s building trades.”

DOI Commissioner Mark G. Peters said: “As alleged, these contractors preyed on their workers, using deception and betrayal to steal their pay. This law enforcement initiative to expose and stop construction owners from cheating their employees and then lying to regulators so they can keep going is critical to instilling integrity and stopping these charged crimes. DOI is proud to stand with the Manhattan DA’s Office and all our partners to put an end to this type of worker exploitation.”

New York City Comptroller Scott M. Stringer said: “This is about right and wrong—and it’s about fairness. That’s why I take our authority to set and enforce prevailing wages very seriously, and it’s why my office will continue to work with the Attorney General and District Attorneys to bring unscrupulous employers to justice. We’re going to work together like never before to track down those who commit serious prevailing wage violations and stand up for the law.”

Joint Wage Theft Initiative

In New York State, wage theft accounts for more than $1 billion in lost wages per year and affects tens of thousands of workers. To address this type of fraud, district attorneys from New York City and State, the New York City Department of Investigation (“DOI”), New York City Comptroller’s Office, New York State Attorney General’s Office, and New York State Department of Labor (“NYS DOL”) joined together to investigate wage-related theft, fraud, and abuse as part of the Wage Theft Initiative.

To date, several cases involving multiple jurisdictions have been brought against defendants across New York City and State, accounting for more than $2.5 million in stolen wages affecting over 400 workers.<sup>1</sup>

Vance, Jr., created the Construction Safety Community Project to train workers to recognize workplace safety hazards and report them to law enforcement. To date, prosecutors and community coordinators assigned to a task force, along with DOI investigators, have given approximately 45 presentations to more than 2,000 workers in both English and Spanish, encouraging them to submit anonymous reports, photos, videos, and other materials documenting unsafe work conditions.

These reports may be investigated by members of the Construction Fraud Task Force, which was formed in partnership with multiple city agencies to identify and pursue criminal cases against those who endanger the wellbeing of others, contribute to industry corruption, and create unsafe spaces in New York City and State.

Criminal Justice Investment Initiative

This year, the Manhattan District Attorney’s Office also announced a $1.6 million grant to the New York Committee for Occupational Safety and Health (“NYCOSH”) to fund a program benefiting tens of thousands of low wage-earning individuals. The program, which is part of the Manhattan District Attorney’s Criminal Justice Investment Initiative (“CJII”), is designed to end the disproportionate number of immigrant workers who become victims of workplace crimes committed by their employers, including wage theft, provide victims with referrals and access to support services, and increase the reporting of criminal activities by employers.
