Van Dyke Houses in Brownsville, Brooklyn, is among NYCHA’s 334 communities. Completed in 1964, it includes 1,714 apartments, which are home to 1,702 families. Van Dyke Houses was selected to be part of NextGeneration NYCHA, an initiative aimed at organizing and convening residents to develop a long-term vision for their communities.

NextGeneration NYCHA is a multi-faceted, long term strategic planning process that will explore creative ways to sustain public housing for the next generation of New Yorkers. It is an inclusive process that will gather input from NYCHA residents, administrators and managers, and community partners and residents to address how NYCHA looks, operates, and is financed.

The initiative started with an organizing effort that included door-to-door canvassing as well as building- and community-wide meetings. The effort involved 710 Van Dyke residents and identified six topics of importance to residents:

- Affordable Housing
- Security
- Job Training
- Abandoned Buildings and Lots
- Afterschool Programs
- Daycare Center

Vision sessions consisted of three workshops held at the Van Dyke Community Center on September 10, 13, and 15, 2014. A total of 186 Van Dyke residents participated in the workshops, some of them participating more than once, along with 18 Brownsville residents. Numerous elected officials and other key stakeholders were invited as observers. Workshop participants were asked to envision how their community could change for the better, map places in the neighborhood that are unique in a positive way and those that are not, and vote on community priorities. Those ideas were gathered and used to develop vision statements, goals, and next steps.

When asked, workshop participants prioritized Affordable Housing (33%) and Security (32%) as the highest priorities in Van Dyke followed by Job Training and Abandoned Buildings and Lots in a tie (11%). Expanding Afterschool Programs and building a Daycare Center in Van Dyke received lower priorities, perhaps a reflection of the older age of vision session’s participants.

Residents strongly support the creation of truly affordable new housing in the neighborhood to enable families to expand and relocate and to bring additional retail stores and services to the area. They are cautious, however, about adding new buildings on Van Dyke property for fear that the area’s density will increase while opportunities for open space will decrease. This is a critical trade-off that needs to be evaluated as the vision moves into implementation.

Security comments focused on maintaining functioning entrance door locks and intercoms and on reducing loitering inside lobbies, stairwells, and in front of buildings. They also addressed the overall security of the neighborhood, which is affected by abandoned buildings, empty lots, and poor lighting. Establishing a positive rapport with law enforcement and increasing their presence was also a big part of the conversation on security.

Expanding job training opportunities is key for residents to be able to compete and qualify for current and future jobs. As jobs are scarce in Brownsville, residents supported expanding jobs available locally and promoting small business creation and entrepreneurship.

Residents are clear about the fact that abandoned buildings and lots dramatically affect the security and appearance of the neighborhood. They are poorly lit and unsupervised spaces. Residents strongly favor redeveloping them as an opportunity to add affordable housing and services outside of Van Dyke and as a tool to beautify the community and expand opportunities for open space and recreation.

Participants recommended adding afterschool programs as a way to provide safe and focused activities for children and young adults and building a daycare center inside Van Dyke as a way to enable young parents to seek and maintain employment.

In all, there are 35 recommended steps to bring Van Dyke’s community vision to fruition. Some will have an immediate impact on the community’s quality of life. Others will take longer to be implemented. Implementing the vision is nonetheless a complex undertaking that will require an unprecedented collaborative effort involving NYCHA, the public sector, community partners, and especially residents. All the goals identified by the community and the proposed next steps are listed in the back.
