Message from the Queens Family Justice Center
OCDV, Sanctuary for Families and the Queens Human Trafficking Intervention Court (HTIC) are celebrating the two-year anniversary of the Queens Trafficking Intervention Pro Bono Project (Q-TIPP), an innovative project that provides free immigration legal services to individuals arrested on prostitution and related charges. Through Q-TIPP, highly-trained pro bono attorneys work under the supervision of Sanctuary for Families and provide legal screenings to dozens of trafficking victims and at-risk individuals referred by the HTIC each month. This exciting project is housed at the Queens Family Justice Center, which provides a safe and welcoming environment for potential clients to receive much-needed legal information and advice.

In its first two years, Q-TIPP provided immigration legal screenings to more than 350 individuals, the majority of whom disclosed histories of trauma, including sex trafficking, domestic violence, rape and sexual assault, forced sterilization, forced abortion and related abuses. Not only does this project extend critical services to victims in need, it also provides great insight into the experiences of immigrants in New York City who have survived sex trafficking or are at high risk of being trafficked. Major findings include:

- The vast majority of those receiving legal services are women between the ages of 35 and 50, predominantly monolingual Mandarin speaking and of Chinese nationality;
- The majority of trafficking victims identified were trafficked in illicit massage parlors;
- Nearly all who were identified as victims of trafficking were deemed eligible for the T visa, a form of immigration relief that provides work authorization, a pathway to a Green Card and reunification with minor children abroad;
- One quarter of those screened disclosed histories of domestic violence and commonly cited intimate partner violence as a push factor underlying their migration to the United States;
- Nearly three-quarters of individuals screened did not hold lawful immigration status;
- Many of those lacking lawful immigration status had applied for or were contemplating applying for asylum; frequently, those with pending asylum applications lacked a basic understanding of U.S. asylum law and the risk of applying for asylum; and,
- Those receiving legal screenings frequently expressed interest in ESL classes, medical care and job training/placement services.

The Queens HTIC is one of New York’s statewide system of eleven Human Trafficking Intervention Courts. Launched in 2013, these courts have been lauded as a national model for their innovative approach to assisting individuals arrested on prostitution and related criminal charges by providing them with a wide array of services. The guiding principle of the courts is that individuals arrested on prostitution charges should not be treated as criminals, but as victims and survivors of commercial sexual exploitation and human trafficking. The Queens HTIC hears approximately 900 cases each year, an estimated 60 percent of which concern foreign-born defendants, many of whom are undocumented. In its first two years alone, Q-TIPP has proven itself to be an invaluable resource for many survivors of sex trafficking in New York City.

explicit photos, the law has been inadequate. After suffering an invasion of privacy fused with sexual violation, victims — predominantly women — are often left with no legal recourse. Lawmakers in Congress want to change that. Representative Jackie Speier unveiled new legislation that would criminalize the spread of revenge porn for the first time nationwide, a move that advocates and victims say is a needed corrective to humiliating crimes that often go unpunished. The law would make it unlawful to knowingly distribute sexually explicit images of a person with reckless disregard for their lack of consent. Websites that knowingly solicit such images, or advertise that they have them, can be held criminally liable as well. The bill states that people who violate the law would face fines and up to five years in prison.

Biden and Obama Rewrite the Rulebook on Domestic Violence Records, Protective Orders

The federal background check system missed 7 percent of gun purchases that should have been denied over the past decade based on the buyer’s domestic violence record or a court protective order, the government’s chief watchdog said. While 89,000 sales were blocked, nearly 6,800 were cleared despite the buyer’s record, said the Government Accountability Office, partly blaming the complexities of domestic violence cases in determining whether they rise to the level that would land someone on the no-buy list.

College Sexual Assaults

According to White House officials, top members of the administration — including the president, the vice president, their wives and members of the Cabinet — will not visit institutions where they feel the school leadership has not taken sufficient action to pursue sexual-assault allegations and hold offenders accountable. Vice President Biden said in an interview that he would like the federal government to “take away their money” if a college or university fails to change its ways. As the administration nears its end, the urgency of some proposals has dissipated, but the focus on campus sexual misconduct has intensified: “Now’s the time to put the pedal to the metal,” Vice President Biden said.

It’s Time To Recognize What Many Mass Murderers Share In Common

A Cycle of Violence: When a Woman’s Murder Is Called ‘Understandable’

Lance Hart killed his wife,
In the years before Mohamed Lahouaiej Bouhlel made the reprehensible decision to commit mass murder by ramming his truck into a crowd gathered for a Bastille Day fireworks display in Nice, France, he terrorized his own family. Four days after Lahouaiej Bouhlel killed 84 people, a portrait has begun to emerge of the mass murderer — not as a religious extremist but as an angry, volatile man who physically and verbally abused those closest to him on a regular basis. As The Huffington Post has previously reported, this story is tragically familiar. In the past few years, many of the men who have committed heinous, unthinkable acts of violence against the public have had a history of abusive behavior against their intimate partners. Prior to unleashing their deranged violence onto the world, it appears they practiced it against the most vulnerable and accessible targets — those living inside their homes.

Social Media Abuse Of Nursing Home Residents Often Goes Unchecked

Regulators and law enforcement officials nationwide are struggling to respond when employees at long-term care facilities violate the privacy of residents by posting photos of them on social media websites. In a story published last year, ProPublica identified nearly three dozen of these cases, the majority involving Snapchat, a social media service in which photos appear for a few seconds and then disappear. They have discovered nine more instances since then.

Man Charged With Murder for Allegedly Driving His Partner to Suicide

For approximately 10 years, Minnesota authorities say, Jessica Haban was physically and emotionally abused by her partner. Long Vang, 34, allegedly smashed her head into a washing machine, tossed her into the wall by her hair, held a knife to her throat, and in May 2015, punched her in the head with a closed fist, causing a traumatic brain injury. Haban was hospitalized on three occasions, but never stayed long. She was afraid of losing custody of her kids — which, according to a social worker, is what Vang told her would happen if she continued receiving care. On December 16, 2015, three days after being discharged from the hospital, Haban killed herself at age 28. Earlier this month, in a surprising move, authorities arrested Vang and charged him with murder for allegedly driving his partner to take her own life.
Viral Humans Of New York Post Shows Why Every Kid Needs To Learn About Consent

Recently, Humans of New York shared a photo of a young woman, along with a caption about one of her first sexual experiences, and the sad story she shared highlights just how much work we have to do to teach young people about consent. The post is heartbreaking, because it sounds like sexual experiences so many of us have had or have heard about from friends — blurred lines, coercion, discomfort, a feeling that you’re not ready for what’s happening but you have to go along with it.

For Brazil's Women, Laws Are Not Enough To Deter Rampant Violence

The country hosting this summer’s Olympic Games is one of the most dangerous places in the world to be a woman. In Brazil, a woman is killed every two hours and assaulted every 15 seconds — often by someone she knows — according to a report from the nonprofit Mapa da Violencia. In particular, gender violence has skyrocketed in the northern Brazilian state Rio Grande do Norte, where Moreira's hometown of Natal is located. According to the Observatory of Violence for the State Council on Human Rights, violence against women in the state has grown 39 percent in the last four years. One hundred and twenty women were murdered in the state in 2014.
In India, Snapchat Is Leading a Revolution around Domestic Violence Support

In recent years, family and domestic violence services in India have increasingly recognized the unique and emerging role social media can play in addressing problems around violence against women. Earlier this year, the Climb Against Sexual Abuse campaign drew global attention when survivors of sexual abuse used Snapchat filters to hide their identity while speaking publicly about their experiences. It's this understanding of the vital role of a phone that led to Snap Councillors: a service that provides support and information around domestic and sexual violence through Snapchat. The idea was conceived by advertising creative director Rajshekar Patil, who had been exploring several social projects when he became interested in the potential of the app to reach out to vulnerable parties - especially young people.
