DEPARTMENT OF INVESTIGATION STATEMENT ON THE NEW YORK CITY POLICE DEPARTMENT'S RESPONSE TO REPORT ON QUALITY-OF-LIFE SUMMONSES

DOI stands by its Report. That Report produced objective statistical evidence that certain specific NYPD strategies do not have a measurable link to a reduction in violent crime. The NYPD, in its response, provides no similar data or analysis to refute this finding. This is no small point: The tactics at issue -- summonses for several quality of life offenses -- have been a source of complaint and tension in many of New York's communities and thus require careful review of the type we provided to avoid overuse.

Last year, the NYPD expressly stated that quality of life summonses could be used as a tactic to directly reduce violent crime. The fact that it now acknowledges for the first time, after the issuance of our report, that such a relationship is more complex, is an important first step in improving the use of this tactic and its impact on the communities we all serve.

Finally, while the NYPD's response cites two academic reviews of our Report, the NYPD fails to call attention to the full summary of their accounts. Specifically, the NYPD fails to note that one of the reviews stated that: "The report reflects a very positive approach to assessing criminal justice practices. It seeks to identify relevant data to use to understand what is going on in the field. Its recommendation that the NYPD should rely on a 'more data-driven approach to determine the relative impact of quality of life summonses and misdemeanor arrests on the reduction of crime' is certainly a very good one."

The New York City Department of Investigation (DOI) is one of the oldest law-enforcement agencies in the country and is New York City's corruption watchdog. DOI investigations may involve any agency, officer, elected official, or employee of the City, as well as those who do business with or receive benefits from the City. DOI's strategy attacks corruption comprehensively, through independent, systemic investigations that lead to high-impact arrests, preventive internal controls, and operational reforms that improve the way the City runs. The Office of the Inspector General for the New York City Police Department (OIG-NYPD) is part of DOI and is independent of NYPD. OIG-NYPD is charged with investigating, reviewing, studying, auditing, and making recommendations relating to the operations, policies, programs, and practices of NYPD, with the goal of enhancing the effectiveness of the Police Department and increasing the public's confidence in the police force. Inspector General Eure reports to DOI Commissioner Peters.
